Let your build flourish!

A well presented garden provides the all important synergy for recently completed projects. So give your home the setting it deserves with carefully thought out Landscaping and Planting plans.

Whether it is financial or time constraints, we always seem to plan for our gardens last. But whether you're building or renovating, it pays to plan in advance to achieve the perfect setting you require to showcase your home.

On new build or extensive renovation projects, you should evaluate your gardens potential before even a brick is laid. Why? Throughout the duration of your build you may 'landlock' your garden preventing access for heavy machinery or materials. This retrospective form of landscape planning can cause significant delays and rising costs by having to manually complete your landscaping. That is why we recommend that you form a strategy at the outset so professional trades can complete each phase of your build cost effectively. Essentially landscaping is broken down into two key elements; hard & soft Landscaping.

Hard Landscaping consists of the structural elements of your garden i.e. footpaths, patios, retaining walls etc. Making time to review products and listen to builders will allow you to optimise your garden setting and reduce down maintenance regimes.

Soft Landscaping is principally about plants and planting. Hopefully you will have got a head start here with a few plants bedded in and maturing. But now's the time to enjoy choosing what sort of garden you would like. The key to a good garden is to keep the right plants for your site ... happy plants will flourish and quickly look full and mature.
